WYOMING SHIPS INDIGENTS TO OGDEN

M. Flores, a Mexican railroad section hand of Rock Springs, Wyo., was taken to the county jail yesterday afternoon suffering a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism.

The man states that he had been taken care of in the Rock Springs hospital but because he would not take the medicine prescribed, which he said was too strong, he was given transportation to Ogden. He is almost helpless.

He will likely be turned over to the railroad company.

Because of delay in getting the signature of Governor Spry to requisition papers for J. T. Owens, charged with the abandonment of his family, Deputy Sheriff Charles Ellsworth did not leave for Los Angeles, until this morning. He will be gone about ten days.

Owens is held a prisoner on the complaint of his wife that he left her self and two children some time ago without providing means of support.

The governor of California has expressed his willingness to honor the requisition issued by Governor Spry. Owens will be brought here for trial.

RAZORS ARE TO BE MADE IN THIS CITY

Within a comparatively short time the name of Ogden will appear in magazine advertisements as the distributing point of a product which promises to revolutionize the manufacture and sale of safety razors. The new article is from the inventive brain of Albert Oberhelm of this city.

Four patents were issued April 9, 1913, by the United States government to Mr. Oberhelm for a new double-edged safety razor, guards and case, and improvements thereon. The razor is a great improvement of anything that has heretofore been put on the market in the form of a "safety."

As soon as he can incorporate his company in Ogden, Mr. Oberhelm will begin the manufacture of the razors and cases in this city and will then launch a most extensive advertising campaign. The Saturday Evening Post and every magazine and publication with an international circulation will be used in putting the name of the razor and Ogden before the world.

As the best German or Sheffield steel will be necessary in the manufacture of the razor blade, Mr. Oberhelm plans to import the blades in the rough and make the finished product in Ogden.

There probably is not another man in the state who is as well versed on steel and razors as Mr. Oberhelm. Shortly after he left school in Germany, he spent much time as an apprentice with a tool and model maker and has studied the safety razor problem for years. As a result of his exhaustive study, Mr. Oberhelm has produced a safety razor which is simple, safe and efficient and which, without doubt, will bring fortune to himself and much advertising to Ogden as a manufacturing center.

In the past fifteen years, Mr. Oberhelm has made a collection of more than twenty-five safety razors. His invention is a vast advance over them all.

Many prominent and influential business men of this city are interested and will be the incorporators of the company which will be formed this week.

Patents have been applied for in all of the principal foreign countries. Mr. Oberhelm states that within the United States alone there are more than twenty millions of selfshavers and that there is a growing demand for "safeties."

TWENTY-THIRD STREET CAR LINE

A force of men was placed at work putting in the cross rails at the intersection of the Washington avenue and the Twenty-third street lines on Washington avenue this morning.

Manager Kline of the Rapid Transit company states that the connection will be made by tomorrow evening and on Wednesday the Twenty-third street line will be operated direct from Washington avenue to the Dea hospital.

WILLIAM SPROULE ENROUTE HOME

President William Sproule, accompanied by his private secretary in his private car, "39," stopped off a few moments in Ogden today on his way back to San Francisco from the railroad meeting in New York to which he went a few weeks ago.

Sproule did not leave his car during the stop in the city. His secretary sent several telegrams and mailed letters at Ogden, but stated that there was no information to be given out regarding the present situation in the merger business.

Vice President C. E. Herrin of the Southern Pacific who went east with President Sproule returned through Ogden yesterday in his car. The other officials who made the trip will remain in New York for a few days longer.

Terrence Rooney, the steeplejack, is in the city and he expects to do some climbing. He will paint a few smokestacks and possibly cover the 75-foot gas plant with paint for the Utah Light & Railway company. At any rate, Rooney is a climber of renown and pretty well known around the world.

Recently he was with the Sells-Flot to show working in the capacity of a rigger, but he tired of the show and stopped off in Utah, finding his way finally to Ogden which he concedes to be the best city in the state. He says he has had much experience in the climbing business and that it is as easy for him to go up a high steeple as a low one. In fact, he claims to feel more at ease high up than low down. He likes an elevated perch.

Rooney says he has climbed to the top of St. Peter's church in Rome, has mounted the top of the Singer building in New York, painted chimneys and flagstaves from Nome, Alaska, to Naples, and traveled through Russia, Japan and the entire Orient. He states that he expects to place his hand on the head of the Angel Moroni on the Salt Lake temple before he leaves the state.

DECISION GIVEN ON ECCLES CORNER

The long looked for decision from the supreme court of Utah is the injunction proceedings of the Commercial National bank of this city against the late David Eccles, et al., was handed down Saturday afternoon, the majority of the justices of the supreme bench affirming the decision of Judge N. J. Harris of the district court. The decision was written by Justice McCarty and concurred in by Justice Straup, Justice Frick writing a dissenting opinion.

The attorneys for the Eccles interests have not yet received the written opinion of the court and cannot at this time state what further action in the premises may be taken. It is possible, they say, in the face of a dissenting opinion, that a rehearing may be asked for. However, no plans have been made and it is probable the matter will not be carried further in the courts.

In the meantime the steel skyscraper will be erected, the construction work to begin within the next few days. The steel is on hand and the contractors are ready. For the present, the building will be erected to a point within about 25 feet of the old wall in controversy and it is possible that, inasmuch as the court has rendered its decision, the old wall will be taken down at once and replaced by a steel wall, the adjoining property interests to the south to be protected in accordance with the ruling of the courts.

The attorneys for the Eccles interests fully expected a reversal of the lower court's decision but it was not forthcoming, so they will abide by the results unless a change can be had through a rehearing before the supreme court.

A few months after the destruction by fire of the Eccles building on Twenty-fourth street and Washington avenue, the owner of the property proceeded to clear the ruins, but, when the tearing down of the south wall began, the Commercial National bank had issued from the district court a writ of injunction to prevent the parties from destroying the wall below the third story, claiming that the bank owned a part of the wall and had been using it to support the floors of building adjoining it on the south. The work was stopped and finally the case was heard before Judge Harris on its merits. The defendant denied that the bank had an interest in the wall.

The decision of Judge Harris in effect was that the plaintiff company was entitled to an easement in the wall for the purpose of supporting the floors and roof of the building and which had become attached to the disputed wall, stating further, however, that the defendant was the owner of the wall and could remove it, subject only to the easement prescribed in the decision.

In the meantime Mr. Eccles, the defendant, had planned to rebuild the block, but he did not care to proceed with the construction until the cloud on the title to the wall should be cleared away by a decision from the supreme court. An appeal was taken and the corner has since remained a vacant plot.

In his decision, Judge Harris held that the plaintiff company purchased an easement from the defendant, using the following language:

"That the plaintiff constructed its building upon its land immediately south of the said land of the said defendant, David Eccles, in the year 1903, and at that time, for the sum of $634.67 paid to the said defendant, the plaintiff purchased and became the owner of an easement in the foundation and brick wall situated along the south boundary of the said defendant's premises from the basement to the center of the sills of the third story, and the said plaintiff has used the said wall for the support and maintenance of its building situated on its said premises from the time of the construction of the same. That no interest in the wall and foundation, other than the easement afore said, and no interests in the lands upon which said wall stands was purchased by the plaintiff from the defendant."

The judge further stated in his conclusions, that the Eccles building was burned down in November, 1911, but that the south wall was left standing, which "was sufficient and ample for the support and maintenance of the plaintiff's building as constructed on its said premises," and that as it has no other support on the north side, the taking out of the wall in controversy would cause the north wall of the building owned by the bank to fall and become a mass of ruins.

Respecting the question of tearing down the south wall of the Eccles ruins to erect a new one, the court said:

"The said wall is insufficient to support another building of like kind as that destroyed, and insufficient to support such new and modern buildings as defendant proposes to erect, and that the defendant, David Eccles, is entitled to tear down and remove the said wall situated along the south boundary of his said premises, exercising such due care and diligence in the prosecution thereof as will prevent injury to the plaintiff's premises."

"That the said defendant will be required to replace said wall at his own expense, with such new and stronger wall as will meet the requirements of his said new proposed building, and shall so construct the wall as to afford and give to the plaintiff the same easement, right and support and use for its building in the said wall to be constructed as the plaintiff now has and enjoys in the present wall."

The decision was given May 1, 1912, a little more than a year ago.

PREPARING FOR THE SCHOOL EXHIBIT

Checking up returned books and making out the clerk and treasurer's reports are still occupying the time and attention of the office force of the city schools. It will be several days before the work is completed.

The school work that is to be exhibited in Salt Lake during the National Educational association convention has been selected and will be packed away in cases for shipment to Salt Lake. The exhibit will contain work from the art, industrial and academic departments of the city schools.

CHILDREN WITH THEIR FLOWER BASKETS

Sunday was Children's day in First Presbyterian church and a great day it was for the younger members of the Sunday school. The program was in charge of the primary department workers Mrs. William Altman, Miss Carnahan, Miss Helen Bichsel, Miss Florence Dinsmore, and Mr. Cecil Wright. Mr. J. R. Cooper, as superintendent of the school, aided in the exercises.

The church was decorated with roses and wild flowers. The rostrum was circled with groups of rose bouquets and the back was banked with greens and white blossoms. Many carnations were also used in the decorations.

The attendance of the school was so large as to fill the church. The primary department showed the skill and care of their training and justified the time and labor expended upon this portion of the school.

The basket drill was the feature of the day. Bright colored baskets had been made for each scholar and these were filled with roses and carnations. The children carried them in their marching and, at the close of the services, took them home with them.
